Excessive or blanket redactions—such as fully blacked-out or blurred video screens—can severely impair the bublic's ability to understand the context and evaluate public agency conduct. In accordance with FOIA's requirement to release all reasonably segregable non-exempt material (see 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)), I request that redactions be limited only to those portions that are strictly exempt, such as personally identifiable information or information that would compromise an active investigation. Visual redactions should not obscure entire frames or scenes unless no other means of protecting exempt content is feasible. To ensure transparency and to facilitate meaningful public oversight, please consider using pixelation, masking, or other targeted redaction methods that preserve as much of the visible and audible context as possible.
